What happens to fundamental rights?

1. The Government has said that one of the three fundamental principles underlying the Bill is that, by converting EU law into UK law, the Bill will ensure that individuals' "rights and obligations will not be subject to sudden change".¹ In the White Paper, the Government stated that "The Government's intention is that the removal of the Charter from UK law will not affect the substantive rights that individuals already benefit from in the UK."² The Secretary of State gave an assurance in Parliament that the intention was to ensure that all relevant substantive rights in the Charter would form part of domestic law after Brexit.³
2. The Bill provides that the Charter of Fundamental Rights will not form part of domestic law after exit day⁴ but seeks to preserve fundamental rights and principles which exist irrespective of the Charter.⁵ Many of the rights in the Charter are also protected in the European Convention on Human Rights ('ECHR') and therefore (for the most part⁶) already part of domestic law through the HRA. Some other fundamental rights protected by the Charter are protected by the common law or by existing statutory provisions.
3. It is welcome that there are provisions in the Bill that prevent Ministers from using their new powers to amend, repeal, or revoke the HRA or any subordinate legislation made under it.⁷ However, there are fundamental rights protected by EU law which are not protected to the same extent by the ECHR or by existing domestic law. For example, the High Court (in David Davis and others' challenge to provisions in the Data Retention and Investigatory Powers Act

² Paragraph 2.25; see also HC Hansard 30 March 2017 col 429: "The fact that the charter will fall away will not mean that the protection of rights in the UK will suffer as a result."

⁴ Clause 5(4)

⁵ Clause 5(5)

⁶ The HRA does not incorporate all of the rights protected by the ECHR. In particular, the right to an effective remedy for breach of Convention rights in Article 13, ECHR is not incorporated.

⁷ Clause 7(6)(e)

2014) held that Article 8 of the EU Charter, which concerns data protection, “clearly goes further, is more specific, and has no counterpart in the ECHR”.⁸

4. Another example is the right to an effective remedy in Article 47 of the Charter. The right to an effective remedy is protected by Article 13 ECHR but that right is not incorporated by the HRA.
5. It is unclear what the status of these rights will be after exit day. Fundamental rights are also general principles of EU law which will form part of retained EU law (to the extent recognised before exit day) but the general principles will not be able to be relied on to enforce individual rights.⁹ The Government has given assurances that no substantive rights will be lost and it needs to demonstrate that all of the substantive rights protected by the Charter will be protected to the same extent by domestic law, including the HRA, after exit day.
